Energy Poverty keeps ~20% of the world's population living in the dark, lighting their homes with dirty, dangerous and expensive fuels like kerosene.

In the small Pacific Island state of Vanuatu, our organization along with our partners, have spent years helping households buy small solar lights. Distributed through cooperatives and women's groups and sold for the same cost as a few months of kerosene, the lights have allowed work to continue beyond sunset. Families can keep businesses running and children can study while the health risks of breathing in kerosene fumes or getting burnt are no longer creating worry. Our field partners have sold more than 10,000 of these solar lights and have been a part of eradicating kerosene from close to 50% of the entire country.
